Galileo Galilei was the first scientist to use a telescope to study the space and, when he looked at Jupiter, in 1610, he discovered four large moons: Io, Europa, Ganymede, and Callisto. We call these four large moons the Galilean Moons. Today we know that Jupiter really has 67 moons (possibly more), but the largest are the Galilean ones.

Io is the third largest of Jupiter's moons; it's a little larger than the Earth's moon. Io is a very violent place in a dangerous part of Jupiter's magnetic field. The radiation in this area can kill a human immediately.

Io's surface is full of giant volcanoes which erupt with extreme frequency.

Europa is a cold, plane, ice covered world. Scientists believe that Europa's center is hot and that, under the ice, there is a liquid ocean of warm water. It makes scientists think that Europa is the most probable place for life in the Solar System, apart from the Earth.

Scientists think that, like in Europa, Ganymede has a liquid water ocean under its icy exterior. Ganymede is the largest of Jupiter's moons. It is larger in diameter than both the planets Mercury and Pluto.

Callisto is the eighth moon from the surface of Jupiter, and the second largest. Callisto is almost the same size as the planet Mercury.

Colombia’s Cartagena and Bogota have much to enjoy

By: Pamela Jacobs

“People know Colombia for five things gold, emeralds, coffee, flowers and beautiful people”, my tour guide explains. 13 all true. But there’s also so much more to enjoy in this South American republic: from historic fortresses and churches 14 stylish hotels and a growing restaurant scene.

A recent trip brought me to two cities, 15 Cartagena, and Bogotá, Colombia’s capital and 16 city. Years of European conquest here led to centuries-old fortresses, churches and squares that are now guidebook favorites. As tourism 17 flourishing in recent years, hip bars and restaurants opened their doors. Various museums offer a window into the history and culture of these wonderful cities.
